

EHA University Accreditation Panel

Expression of Interest

EHA has been responsible for accrediting environmental health university courses for over 25 years. The EHA Environmental Health Course Accreditation Policy sets the standards for environmental health university courses. Graduates of accredited courses are recognised as having the skills, knowledge and attributes required to practice as Environmental Health Officers (EHOs).

There are currently a number of universities that are due for their course accreditation to be reviewed. This review process will be undertaken by the EHA University Accreditation Panel.

The University Accreditation Panel has representatives from:

- Environmental Health academia
- Employer Groups (Local, State or Commonwealth Government)
- WA Professional Review Board
- EHA nominated representatives (State and/or national)

The EHA University Accreditation Committee would like to establish a pool of panel members who can assist in this accreditation process of university environmental health courses. Induction for panels members is provided by EHA.

If you would like to be considered as a member of panel to assess Universities against the EHA Accreditation Policy, could you please provide the following information that will be presented to the EHA University Accreditation Committee for their consideration.
